NDP plunge not a threat: Selinger

Premier points to similarities in government plans, policies

The plunge in support for federal New Democrats in Monday's election may be the latest sign of trouble for Manitoba Premier Greg Selinger in his upcoming bid for another term in office.

But Selinger wasn't showing any sign of worry Tuesday. He pointed out that his NDP government's agenda, which includes a string of deficits and increased spending on infrastructure, is similar to what Liberal prime minister-designate Justin Trudeau is promising.

"You look at the agenda we've been working on in Manitoba — growing the economy with good jobs and infrastructure. Our policy (is) the federal policy," Selinger said. "You look at our interest in making sure we have more newcomers come to Manitoba, including refugees. They want to do that as well. So I think we are going to find we have a lot in common."

Selinger also suggested his government can be a fresh option, even after 16 years of NDP rule.

"We have to be the change (voters) want, which is why I've identified the issues that we share in common with the federal government."

Manitoba's NDP government has been lagging far behind the Opposition Progressive Conservatives in opinion polls since it raised the provincial sales tax in 2013 contrary to a campaign promise. The next election is set for April 19 under the province's fixed election-date law. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Voters say they danced after defeat of Stephen Harper

The polls closed, the results went up and a group began dancing, singing and drumming in the middle of Portage Avenue and Main Street to say goodbye to Stephen Harper.

The group began their celebration on the sidewalk, but moved into the intersection after a few minutes. They continued their singing and dancing even as cars honked and sped by them. One car went right through the group, almost hitting a man.

The group was cleared out of the street after about 10 minutes of celebration, but continued their cheers back by a building on Portage and Main.

"We made a call out to the warriors, strong indigenous men and women to come out here," said Gerry Shingoose, who was part of the group early Tuesday morning. "We're going to say goodbye to Harper. We struggled under his power. He didn't do any nation-to-nation consultation with our people. He harmed Mother Earth. He never listened to our plea for missing and murdered women.

"We're celebrating that he's going to be gone."

Clement Chartier, president of the Metis National Council, said he believes indigenous people in the intersection were celebrating more for who got kicked out of office, than for who now takes over as prime minister.

lost years, and now we have an opportunity to get back into a more meaningful relationship with the federal government.

"Harper had his own philosophy that was more geared towards economic development and job creation, and basically the aboriginal peoples weren't high on that priority list."

While Elections Canada said Tuesday they had yet to calculate aboriginal turnout, voter turnout spiked by up to 20 per cent in some largely aboriginal ridings. Churchill-Keewatinook Aski, which covers much of Manitoba's north, chiefs said turnout was up by more than 11,000.

NEW GOVERNMENT

First Nations hopeful

Some First Nations leaders say the federal election awoke a sleeping giant that the incoming Liberal government will have to contend with — starting with an inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women.

A jubilant Grand Chief Derek Nepinak with the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs called it "a great day."

"I feel a lot of relief from the years of very purposeful oppression that was brought forward from the previous government," Nepinak said.

Expectations of a new Liberal government are high. Chiefs have a list of issues they want addressed. At the top is an inquiry into Canada's estimated 1,200 missing and murdered aboriginal women.

Grand Chief Sheila North Wilson, who represents northern First Nations in Manitoba, said people are looking for an inquiry to be called within the first 100 days of Justin Trudeau's mandate. The families of those who have lost loved ones must be the driving force, she said.

"There are many things that we're hearing from our own families of why they see these problems," said North Wilson, who is with Manitoba Keewatinowik Okimakanak. "A lot of it has to do with poverty, lack of education and even just the complete disregard for our people."

Man forgot loaded gun in taxi: Police

Winnipeg Police have released a picture of a man they say got out of a taxi back in February, but accidentally left his loaded gun in the cab.

the early-morning hours of Feb. 1, a man got into a taxi in the first 100 block of St. Anne's Road.

The man asked to be driven to the 300 block of Blake Street, and eventually got out but left behind a loaded firearm.

Police have been investigating, but said the identity of the suspect has still not been confirmed.

Police are now asking for the public's help in identifying the male and have released a picture of him in the cab.

He is described as male, Aboriginal in appearance, and 22-23 years old.

He is approximately 5'3"-5'4" tall, with a medium build, small moustache, wearing a black baseball cap, black bomber style jacket and jeans.

Anyone with information regarding the investigation and the identity of the suspect is asked to call 204-986-6668.

LAKE WINNIPEG

Protect wetlands, new report urges

A massive new report on Lake Winnipeg says the province must permanently protect remaining wetlands, try and restore others, and study erosion of the shoreline.

The report also calls on provincial officials to make sure they're studying the environmental impact before granting licences for Manitoba Hydro projects.

In all, the 200-page report by the Clean Environment Commission makes more than 30 recommendations.

The report was written after public hearings involving 300 people and 20 Manitoba communities that took place between January and May 2015.

It concludes that Manitoba Hydro regulation of the lake has reduced the extent of flooding that would have been experienced during the heavy precipitation years of the last two decades.

Conservation Minister Tom Nevaushonoff says he'll study the recommendations and proceed with "appropriate implementation."

"The report presents a substantial and thoughtful approach to the regulation of one of our most important water bodies," he says.

A recount in Elmwood-Transcona won't be automatic, so those in the riding have to wait and see if Conservative Lawrence Toet will request one.

Toet lost to NDP Daniel Blaikie by 51 votes in Monday's election, just eight votes too many to automatically force a recount under Elections Canada rules.

An automatic recount occurs when the margin of victory is less than 1/1,000th of the total votes cast. According to Elections Canada, 42,900 votes were cast in Elmwood-Transcona, meaning the margin of victory would have to be 43 votes or less to require a recount.

Blaikie received 14,699 votes while Toet had 14,648.

A spokesperson for Elections Canada said they were still validating the results on Tuesday.

Toet told media Monday night he would decide Tuesday whether or not he'd request a recount.

However, office staff on Tuesday said he has pushed that decision back to Wednesday. Toet didn't immediately return calls for comment.

Toet is no stranger to close battles on election night, having won the riding in 2011

What was Naomi Guilbert's reaction to an early live experience of Japanese taiko drumming? "We should always be this happy!"

Winnipeg troupe Fubuki Daiko's 20th anniversary show is a 75-minute taiko drumming spectacle on until Friday at the Gas Station Arts Centre,

Core member Guilbert said it's an "endless journey" to keep the art of taiko fresh. Yet return

"People always come back for more," he said.

Koshiyama and his wife, long-time collaborator Guilbert, have channelled their passion into tours across North America and Europe as well as two recorded albums, their 2000 debut winning a Prairie Music Award. They've also trained a new generation of rhythmists through the Manitoba Arts Council's Artists in the Schools Program.

While their Japanese teacher Seiichi Tanaka, who established North

America's first taiko school, is still banging away in his 70s, Guilbert and Koshiyama say this week's blowout may be one of their last "big shows."

"Our bodies are mostly holding up," Guilbert deadpanned,

INTERNATIONAL OPINION

The world reacts to Liberals' victory

The first foreign reactions to Justin Trudeau's ascent to the prime ministership included words of both congratulation and consternation — as well as some sexual objectification.

The flood of well-wishes began early Tuesday as world leaders from India, Mexico, Italy, France, China, the U.K. and the U.S. either sent messages or called Canada's newest prime minister-designate.

The foreign media coverage included serious dives into his policies. At the same time there was a bumper crop of tabloid-style headlines about his appearance, with the UK Daily Mirror offering one example of the genre: "Is Justin Trudeau the sexiest politician in the world?"

Sexy or not, his closest international partner showed no sign of being an easy first date. The U.S. sent mixed signals Tuesday, some of encouragement but also notes of caution.

The White House offered congratulations and welcomed talk of closer co-operation on climate change. On the other hand, the Obama administration sought clarity on two files where it was pleased with the relationship with the Conservative government: trade and the military.

A White House spokesman raised the Islamic State bombing mission without prompting Tuesday. There were whispers in Washington over the summer that the administration was concerned about the Liberals' stated intention of withdrawing from the bombing, in order to contribute in other ways.

Trudeau improves Canada's brand

CHARISMA

Leader's good looks could be good for country

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

Within hours of Justin Trudeau's election Monday night, news outlets around the world were remarking on Canada's "hot" and "sexy" new leader.

While Trudeau's square jaw and headline-grabbing hair may not end poverty or reduce Canada's greenhouse gas emissions, branding experts say the prime minister-elect's good looks could have real benefits for the country's reputation.

"The thing that's exciting about Justin is that he brings Canada's brand for the first time into the 21st century," said Bruce Mau Design CEO Hunter Tura. "He's a J.F.K.-like figure. He's got the vitality, the good looks, the beautiful family."

"To have the country represented on the global stage by someone with such charisma is great for brand Canada."

Michèle Champagne, a Toronto writer and designer with a background in global branding, said Trudeau's image could potentially boost immigration and stem the country's "creative brain drain."

"I think the world will see him as this fresh, leftist face," she said. "Does that mean Canada will be a place where more young people want to emigrate? Will it attract more artists and designers to Canada? I don't know."

While he'd prefer to see Canadians discussing policy rather than appearances, Memorial University professor Alex Marland acknowledged the appeal of a popular prime minister.

"The very fact that we're having this conversation shows how much of Canada's identity is wrapped up in its leader," he said. "You look to that to embody everything about our nation."

From a branding perspective, Marland said there are significant differences between Trudeau and Harper.

"I'd say we've gone from policy wonk to young optimism," he said. "And while Harper represented individuals, Trudeau portrays a sense of communitarianism."

Regardless, Marland cautioned against falling into a Trudeau-mania 2.0.

"Any charismatic leader brings a sense of excitement and pride, but it can also cause people to look the other way," he said. "Too often, we're willing to give a politician the benefit of the doubt because they're likable."

FAMILY

First Canadian political dynasty

It seems somehow fitting that the son of the man who first fired up political passion in Stephen Harper should be the person to usher him out of politics.

In besting Harper, Justin Trudeau has created Canada's first national political dynasty, following in the footsteps of his late father, Pierre Trudeau, one of the country's most revered — and reviled — prime ministers.

In the process, he's scored another record for the history books, vaulting his party from a distant third place into first in a single election. And now he'll be the first prime minister to return to the home where he grew up, 24 Sussex Drive. THE CANADIAN PRESS

I'm hopeful tonight's election will put Canada back in a leadership position. Congratulations.

Party insiders laying blame on campaign manager

On his final campaign flight from Abbotsford, B.C., to Calgary, Stephen Harper sat with his closest friends and began putting together the plan for his exit from the Conservative party leadership.

That plan began unfolding Tuesday as Conservative politicians and the party's rank-and-file look to a future leadership race in order to move forward and rebuild from a devastating election loss.

She had four years to prepare for this campaign and was simply wholly unprepared.

Conservative source

Harper was calm about the defeat that lay before him, according to sources who spoke to The Canadian Press over the past 24 hours. During the flight, he sat alternately with longtime aide Ray Novak and party president John Walsh.

In the days to come, the structure of the upcoming leadership race will take shape. Senior parliamentarians Diane Finley, Tony Clement and Rob Nicholson are among the names being floated for interim leader.

At the same time as the leadership race is set in motion, the activists are in the process of raking through the embers of the campaign, analyzing what went wrong and who is to blame.

The party's executive director, Dustin van Vugt, is in charge of a process to review the campaign.

A senior party source said the party will be in debt as a result of the election campaign, something the members aren't used to. Considerable anger is being directed at campaign manager Jenni Byrne.

A high-placed Conservative source with intimate knowledge of the campaign argued that Harper personally performed well, and the leader's tour ran efficiently, but everything else was “an epic failure.”

“While it's ultimately the prime minister's fault because he allowed Jenni to have that role, it is inexcusable that she had four years to prepare for this campaign and was simply wholly unprepared,” said the source, speaking on condition of anonymity. “When the party conducts its internal review, over the course of the next number of months, this one is going to be very thorough and we're going to identify the mistakes that were made, the processes that weren't followed.”

In a sign of how tense things had become, Byrne was packing up her office in the Ottawa party war room as early as last Thursday. She was not in Calgary on election night, and was out of the job Tuesday morning.

NDP stunned after dreams of governing shattered

The soul-searching is starting among members of the NDP after the stunning collapse of their vote in the federal election.

Party insiders say they saw the electoral freight train that was Justin Trudeau's campaign coming down the tracks as much as a month ago, but many in the senior leadership refused to believe it. Even still, the insiders say the scope of the loss and the prospect of a long rebuilding process are just beginning to sink in.

Some of the party's brightest public lights have been extinguished. High-profile MPs lost their seats.

The question on the minds of many people outside the party is whether leader Tom Mulcair will stay to lead a smaller caucus, especially when some in the party have questioned whether he dragged the NDP too far to the centre.

Robin Sears, who once served as the NDP's national director, says the party is not inclined to turf leaders.

OPINION

If your party didn't win, be thankful for a peaceful event

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

I didn't vote on Monday. I can't tell you how sad that made me feel.

Forget about all the rhetoric of civic duty, the grudge you hold against this or that leader. Or political party. Or the talk about making your voice count.

All of that stuff matters. But what I was longing for was to participate in a democratic process that is peaceful, in every sense of the word.

As I mingled in a crowd of Liberal MP-elect Marco Mendicino's supporters, my mind couldn't stop rambling about what elections mean in different parts of the world.

Take Kenya, 2007. Following the highly contested presidential elections, a dispute over the results erupted. People started attacking each other, and thousands lost their lives in the mayhem.

See, for some people it doesn't really matter who wins the most votes. As long as a preferred candidate doesn't win, the system is flawed. And in extreme instances, that means killings, fleeing and refugee life.

I've only voted twice in my life, in the Rwandan presidential elections held in 2003 and 2010. Despite trying to convince myself that my vote actually counted on both occasions, observers from the European Commission, African Union and a gazillion rights organizations reported on serious voting irregularities.

You want to think they're not right, but still you question the validity of your vote. After all, vote rigging does happen.

Not in Canada, apparently. All along, I wasn't expecting NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair to come out and start accusing incoming-prime minister Justin Trudeau of stealing the votes.

I knew Stephen Harper wasn't going to call in military forces in an attempt to cling to power.

But watching them deliver concession speeches, all smiles, almost brought me to tears. The same three guys who had spent the last 78 days tearing each other down by any and all available means were now all of a sudden extolling each other and the electoral process.

I knew Stephen Harper wasn't going to call in military forces in an attempt to cling to power.

Harper's words were more poignant. It's still unreal for me to hear an incumbent and powerful leader admit that the people are never wrong, notwithstanding that they just turfed him out.

So as winners congratulated losers on a well-run campaign, I couldn't have asked for a more powerful way to show the value of a vote.

And I felt sad that, as a permanent resident, I couldn't cast a ballot that was peaceful — in every sense of the word.

Fiscal changes expected

POLICY

TFSA could be rolled back under Liberal leadership

From tax cuts on middle incomes to an expanded Canada Pension Plan, the Liberals made a lot of promises during the federal election campaign that would affect Canadians' finances.

Now that the Liberals have won a majority under leader Justin Trudeau, Canadians can expect to see major changes in federal fiscal policy.

That includes undoing some of the targeted goodies the Conservatives created — such as an expanded TFSA — in favour of making broader tax cuts and benefits.

How soon might Canadians see these changes?

In theory, "a government can introduce anything at any time when they're in a majority," said Brian Brophy, tax partner at Deloitte.

Plans to roll back TFSA contribution limits to $5,500 from $10,000 could be introduced as soon as Parliament resumes sitting, for example.

But, in practice, most major tax changes are announced in federal budgets, which are usually introduced in the late winter or early spring.

Some Liberal campaign promises, such as an expanded Canada Pension Plan, could take longer, as they require the

The Liberals promised to meet with the provinces within the first 90 days to consult on pend on specific financial circumstances, said Caroline Battista, a senior tax analyst with H&R Block.

One of the things about our system is that it's unique to the individual, based in their allowable deductions and qualifying tax credits.

Even higher-income families will benefit from the tax cut on middle incomes, while some lower-income families could lose in the decision to end income splitting, she said.

CRISIS

Country 'in dire straits,' needs more help from EU, official says

Led by riot police on horseback, thousands of weary migrants marched across western Balkans borderlands as far as the eye could see Tuesday as authorities cautiously lowered barriers and intensified efforts to cope with a human tide unseen in Europe since World War II.

Leaders of Slovenia deployed military units to support police on their overwhelmed southern border with Croatia, which delivered more than 6,000 asylum seekers by train and bus to the frontier in bitterly disputed circumstances between the former Yugoslav rivals.

With far too few buses available in Slovenia to cope, most people walked 15 kilometres on rural lanes past cornfields and pastures to reach a refugee camp, a challenge eased by sunny weather after days of torrential rain, fog and frigid winds.

On Slovenia's frontiers with Croatia and Austria, aid workers toiled to erect enough tents and other emergency accommodation to shelter up to 14,000 travellers, more than five times the tiny nation's previous official limit.

Interior Secretary of State Bostjan Sefcic told reporters in the Slovene capital, Ljubljana, that the pressure on border security with Croatia had grown "very difficult with an enormous number of people." He said Slovenia, an Alpine land of barely two million, needed much more help immediately from bigger EU partners to cope or the country might have to adopt border-toughening measures.

"If this continues we will have extreme problems. Slovenia is already in dire straits, an impossible situation," Sefcic said.

In Brussels, Slovenian

President Borut Pahor met European Union leaders and said he expected his country to apply for emergency financial aid and border patrol reinforcements from EU partners.

Hungary, long the most popular eastern gateway for people fleeing conflict and poverty in the Middle East, Asia and Africa, has padlocked its borders for migrants progressively over the past month, forcing the tide west through

Croatia and Slovenia. All three nations have expressed fears of ending up stuck accommodating tens of thousands of asylum-seekers indefinitely if other EU nations farther north close their borders too.

Croatia, which has erected relatively few shelters along its borders with Serbia and Slovenia, directed thousands into special trains and bus convoys Tuesday to Slovenia.

MIDDLE EAST

UN official tries to stem Israel violence

UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon called for calm during a surprise visit to Jerusalem on Tuesday ahead of meetings with Israeli and Palestinian leaders, in a high-profile gambit to bring an end to a month-long wave of violence.

The visit comes amid unrest that erupted a month ago over tensions surrounding Jerusalem's most sensitive holy site, a hilltop compound in Jerusalem's Old City sacred to Jews and Muslims.

A spate of almost daily Palestinian attacks against civilians and soldiers, most of which have involved stabbings, has caused panic across Israel.

"These are difficult times for Israelis and Palestinians. I am here in the hope that we can work together to end the violence, ease the tensions and begin to restore a long term political horizon of peace," Ban said at a press conference with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu Tuesday night.

New rules aim to cut risk of air collisions over Syria

The U.S. and Russia put into practice on Tuesday new rules designed to minimize the risk of air collisions between Russian and U.S.-led coalition aircraft over Syria.

A Russian defence official in Moscow said the "memorandum of understanding" suggests a potential for U.S.-Russian counter-terrorism co-operation, but U.S. officials said it was a narrow arrangement that does not lessen Washington's concern about the

Russian military campaign in Syria. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE QUESTION
I don't wish to tell my wife's parents they're overstaying their welcome, but they really are. They have been here for nearly a month. I am starting to hate them. HELP ME ELLEN.

Dear Ellen,

I was wondering what you recommend when it comes to appropriately telling someone that you hate what they are doing and wish that they would change it this instant. I don't wish to tell these people (as they are guests) that they are overstaying their welcome, but they really are. They have been here for nearly a MONTH now, and I am starting to hate them (they are my wife's parents). I really like them, but I need some space.

HELP ME ELLEN! Or I might go crazy!!!!

Apollo

Dear Apollo,

Your question raises many more questions, starting with: How badly do you want to stay married?

Where is your wife in all this? Is it the case that her parents are driving her crazy too, but she's incapable of confronting them and therefore is relying on you, her champion and protector, to get rid of this invading in-law horde of two? If so, you may safely, and politely, use the standard breakup strategy learned in your dating years.

Take them out for a nice dinner in a public place where they (hopefully) won't freak out when you dump them. Tell them it's you, not them. You're under a lot of stress (imply it's work, not their overbearing demands for constant contact, even though it is), and it's driving you crazy that you can't give them the love and attention they so obviously deserve. Pacify them with promises that you still want them to stay over again from time to time (with firmly set parameters), because you really do love them and want them in your life, but only if they can accept what you're capable of giving.

Although this may sound like the bogus crap used by jilting cowards when they're tired of a too-devoted sex partner (or so I've, um, heard), the fact that you (judging by your letter) really feel this way about your in-laws makes it respectfully honest, even though it may be difficult for you to say and for them to hear.

If, on the other hand, your wife loves having her parents stay with you and never wants them to leave, you're in trouble. You then have to have a respectful, honest conversation with your wife, and of course we hope you'll follow the rules of proper etiquette there too, or at least the rules of the Geneva Conventions.

Finally, if the direct approach with either party fails, you may have to gracefully let go and put your attention elsewhere. And no, Apollo, we do not mean polishing the stair boards leading up to the guest room to a slippery glass-like surface and then plying the in-laws with brandy after dinner. That approach is tantamount to murder, and murder, while sometimes understandable, is never polite.

Take them out for a nice dinner in a public place where they (hopefully) won't freak out when you dump them.

We're thinking more along the lines of, say, that drum kit you've been eyeing since high school. Honestly, after all your self-sacrifice, don't you owe it to yourself to bring it home and finally learn how to play? Or that kitchen reno your wife's been dreaming of — why not purchase a brand-new sledgehammer and do the preliminary demolition yourself to save money? Or, as long as your home is open for extended stays from in-laws, go ahead and invite that poor, neglected uncle of yours — you know, the tone-deaf one who insists on singing along with every contestant on The Voice whether he knows the words or not, while his Doritos-addicted spouse hogs the entire couch because her severe flatulence prevents her from sitting up straight.

It may feel as if you're cutting off your nose to spite your face, but stick with it. Someday you'll be a happy percussionist with a new kitchen who's brought joy to a weird uncle and his digestively challenged wife, and thereby reclaimed his home for himself and — we hope — his wife.

Need advice?

Perhaps someday we'll see a historic election for women. Not this time.

Shocking. Stunning. Historic. A triumph.

The Liberal victory is being called many things — but while it's a reversal of fortune for the country, it's hardly transformative for women in Parliament. Forget "real change"; try status quo.

The number of female MPs rose slightly Monday night, from 76 elected in 2011 to the new total of 88. But given the growth in overall MPs, it's only a tiny jump in women's percentage of seats — from 25 per cent to 26 per cent.

An increase I'd generously call peanuts.

The organization dedicated to increasing the number of women in elected office said as much yesterday. Equal Voice vice-president Joan Weinman said that we at least didn't slide backward, but that "quite honestly, when half the population is women, it would be really nice to see a number that somewhat reflected that in the House of Commons."

Such is the state of politics and feminism that parties can rise and fall with the hard swing of the electoral boom, while women's influence stagnates.

Still, all progress is progress. And the Liberals have promised much for women, including a commitment to the right to abortion and promises to fight violence against women, open more women's shelters and make child care more affordable for those who need it. Crucially, the party hung its hat on a guarantee to name a half-women cabinet, and Justin Trudeau has some high-powered women to choose from, including Chrystia Freeland and Jody Wilson-Raybould, who represents one of 10 indigenous Canadians voted in — another record broken.

When Chatelaine mused in 2014 whether Justin Trudeau was "the candidate women have been waiting for," it noted he "could be a game changer, hauling so-called 'women's issues' into the 21st century."

He may indeed.

"We woke up this morning, and Canada had just elected a self-declared feminist as a prime minister," said Kelly Bowden, spokeswoman for the Up for Debate campaign, suggesting Trudeau will take women's issues seriously.

Meanwhile, Equal Voice is already working toward the next election, planning to recruit and train 5,000 women across the country to run for office (about 500 ran this time around).

I remain skeptical that any election can give to women MPs the kind of dramatic boost that the Liberals at large were given this week, but Weinman disagrees.

"I say to you: Hell yes, it is absolutely possible."

Perhaps she's right. Perhaps we will see, one day, a historic election for women.

RECIPE EXCERPT MAGGIE BATTISTA'S FOOD GIFT LOVE

Candied Blood Orange Rinds

Makes: About 250 strips or about 1 1/2 pounds

Preparation Time: About 3 hours passive time (up to 12 hours total time)

The French understand how to preserve citrus with such elegance and after tasting so many versions of candied rind, in particular, in France, I committed to creating my own recipe. This works just beautifully with oranges and grapefruit, but these Candied Blood Orange Rinds have become one of my signature food gifts. Making them is time intensive but has also honed my multi-tasking skills.

INGREDIENTS

- 5 blood oranges
- 2 cups granulated sugar, plus more for dredging
- 1 1/2 cups water

SPECIAL EQUIPMENT

- Drying rack or parchment paper

1. With a sharp knife, score the peel of the blood oranges into four big wedges. Peel the thick skin wedges away from the fruit, discarding any loose pith fibers. Set the skin aside.

2. Slice the blood oranges in half and juice them with a hand juicer. I get about 1 cup of juice; reserve 1/2 cup for this recipe and store the remaining 1/2 cup for another use (like Blood Orange Mimosas).

3. Slice the orange rinds into strips 1/8-inch and 1/4-inch wide. My knives are very sharp which makes it easy for me to get the 1/8-inch slice, but a 1/4-inch slice is good, too. If the blood orange peel has a very thick white pith, trim a touch of the white pith away and discard. Do not trim too much, as the pith is what retains the sweetness once candied.

4. Place the rinds in a pot and fill with enough cold water to cover by an inch. (If you're unsure of how to quantify the water, place the orange rinds in the pot and hold some down with a small measuring cup with a clean ruler placed inside. Add enough water to come up 1 inch on the ruler. Remove the measuring cup and ruler before beginning to cook.) Bring to a boil and then boil for 3 minutes. Drain.

5. Repeat this process 3 more times. Boiling the rinds several times helps to remove extra bitterness. On the last drain, put the fruit aside for a moment.

6. In a clean pot, add the sugar, water and reserved 1/2 cup blood orange juice. Bring to a boil and then add the rinds. Return to a boil over high heat and then reduce the heat to medium. Cook the rinds for 45 minutes, or until the syrup is very thick and the rinds are barely translucent. Do not stir the pot; just keep swirling the liquid in the pot in order to keep the rinds fully submerged. If you smell any sign of burning, immediately lower the heat and swirl, swirl, swirl.

7. When ready, remove the rinds from the syrup (a few at a time) with tongs and dry them on a rack or a simple piece of parchment paper, making sure to not let them touch each other (they'll stick!) Let them dry for 4 to 6 hours or overnight. If they are still a bit wet, let them dry a little longer. (They will always be just a bit sticky.)

8. When dry, dredge the rinds through sugar. I prefer organic granulated sugar, as the color is a bit more translucent and the rind colour shines through, but traditional white granulated sugar is fine, too. You may need to press the sugar up against the rinds to ensure that it sticks well. Alternatively, if you plan to use the rinds in a baked good, omit the sugar altogether.

9. Store in an airtight container at room temperature for up to 4 weeks or in the fridge for up to 3 months.

GIFT WRAP

Gift wrap supplies: Paper bags, crimping shears, tag, wax paper

Optional: Rubber band, twine

Crimp bags to desired height and fill them with rinds. Write or stamp your label on a tag. With a hole puncher, make a hole through the top of the bag and the top of the tag. Thread a round head paper fastener through the tag and through the bag. Bend the fastener into place.

Decadent peanut butter balls

On one of my long stays in Paris, I was invited to a very chic house party in a gorgeous apartment that towered high above Montmartre. I was nervous about fitting in because I didn't speak French and I had heard stories about the perfection of Parisian parties.

To avoid standing out with an average dish, I timed my arrival just so to buy a fresh apple and rhubarb tart from Les Petits Mitrons, a revered neighborhood bakery. I surmised that a local dessert might make me a hit with the swank crowd. Indeed, my first French house party was exactly how I pictured it. Everyone was terribly cool but also exceptionally sweet. And by the time the dessert offerings were passed, guests grabbed a little bit of everything, including my tart. But the real American victory was yet to be won.

One of the American guests who had lived in Paris began to pass her dessert. The Parisians clearly loved it. I managed to grab one of the last sweets on the tray and when the maker explained the ingredients, I flipped.

As it turns out, the Parisians love peanut butter and chocolate just as much as Americans. Despite vintage music, Paris light and perfect fruit tarts, the biggest hit were these Peanut Butter Balls.

Preparation Time: up to 3 hours

INGREDIENTS

- 3/4 cup confectioners' sugar
- 1 cup peanut butter
- 3 tablespoons (1 1/2 ounce) unsalted butter, melted
- 1 cup rice cereal
- 2 cups milk chocolate chips

SPECIAL EQUIPMENT

- Double boiler

1. Line a small baking sheet with parchment paper. Set aside. Add sugar, peanut butter and butter to a bowl. Mix to combine well — until no trace of confectioners' sugar remains in the bowl.
2. Add rice cereal and mix to combine well — it's easiest to combine with your clean hands. With a measuring spoon or small scoop, form small balls the size of about 1 tsp. Use your hands to pinch, press and roll each into a little ball and place on cookie sheet.

3. When all the mixture has been formed into balls, place the baking sheet in the fridge overnight or in the freezer for 30 minutes to chill and harden.

4. When ready to coat your peanut butter balls with chocolate, prepare the double boiler. Set a double boiler over medium heat. Place a bit of water in the bottom pot making sure the water doesn't touch the underside of the top pot. Assemble the double boiler. If you don't have a double boiler, place a metal or glass bowl on top of a medium pot.

5. Place the chocolate into the top part of a double boiler to melt until a smooth consistency. You may opt to temper the chocolate instead. If you plan to temper the chocolate, reserve half the chocolate for the tempering part of the process.

6. Roll each ball in the melted chocolate and return to the baking sheet. Chill in the fridge for at least 2 hours until hard. They will keep in an airtight container in the fridge for up to 2 weeks.

This Chenin Blanc sheds the B-list rep

Peter Rockwell
For Metro Canada

No matter how you try and drink your way around it, falling into a grape rut, where you keep returning to the same varietals, happens to even the most seasoned wine fans.

While in South Africa last month I rediscovered Chenin Blanc.

Though popular in the vineyards surrounding Cape Town, and those in its original home in France's Loire Valley, this arguably second-tier grape often takes a backseat to Chardonnay and Sauvignon Blanc.

Typically acidic, the versions produced in South Africa play up the grape's soft, plush fruit which turns it into a versatile white wine that marries well with a wide variety of foods.

While I don't usually suggest trying a value-priced wine when trying to get your palate around a new grape (they rarely show its true personality) KWV's Contemporary Collection 2014 Chenin Blanc ($9.45-$10.99) is an impressive take on Chenin.

Dry, with balanced acidity, it offers a creamy mouthfeel of lime and green fruit that would work particularly well with anything spicy.

This brightly hued statuesque cocktail is inspired by the famous wheat-sheaf-bearing Golden Boy sculpture that overlooks Winnipeg from the Manitoba Legislative Building.

The complex flavours of this drink are almost as intriguing as this building's architectural mysteries, secrets and symbols that are hidden in plain view — you can even take a tour on the topic.

Golden Boy

- 2 oz aged aquavit, such as Aalborg Jubilæums Akvavit
- 3/4 oz Bärenjäger Honey Liqueur
- 1/2 oz freshly squeezed lemon juice
- 1/4 oz Strega liqueur
- 1/4 oz Simple Syrup (page 182)
- 1/8 tsp Three Farmers Camellina oil or good-quality olive oil

- Tiny pinch coarse kosher salt or fleur de sel
- Large handful of ice cubes

Author is 'an actress who cooks'

INTERVIEW

Cookbook of veggie recipes the latest from Madhur Jaffrey

Madhur Jaffrey is known to Americans — when she is known at all — as an author of Indian cookbooks. And with good reason: she has written more than two dozen of them.

But that's just the start. The woman often called "the Julia Child of Indian cookery" was born in Delhi, India, and came to the United States in the late 1950s, eventually landing among the New York glitterati. She started her career as an actress — something she continues to do — but soon found herself deeply rooted in the world of food. She has hosted cooking shows both here and in Britain, and helped launch the renowned New York Indian restaurant Dawat.

Now 82, her newest book, Vegetarian India: A Journey Through the Best of Indian Home Cooking, will be released in October. Here she talks about her acting, her start in food, and her pivotal friendship with filmmakers Ismail Merchant and James Ivory.

What was the impetus for Vegetarian India? Why this book and why now?

I've never done a book that's all Indian and all vegetarian. There are many areas of India that I don't know and many cuisines I don't know, and I thought this would be a good way to learn about the cuisines I don't know anything about.

When you came to the U.S. in the late 1950s, you landed first in Vermont, where you taught pantomime, correct? How did that happen?

I needed a job. I was in the theatre and was very kindly employed by the Catholic University theatre team. They said "Why don't you come in the summer and work with our summer stock company," which used to live in Winooski, Vermont.

And from there you went to New York City. What were you hoping to find there?

The theatre brought me to New York. (My first husband)

The recipe for this berry pilaf appears in Madhur Jaffrey's latest cookbook Vegetarian India. MATTHEW MEAD/AP PHOTO

Saeed (Jaffrey) also studied at Catholic. He graduated and came to New York and I came with him. I was working as a guide at the UN at the time, and doing theatre in the Village. We were doing off-Broadway. The way I could stay was to have a visa by working at the UN. Then I could do theatre, for which I was earning something like $10 a week.

I imagine the Indian community in New York was very small at that time. Did everyone know each other?

All those (Indians) who came were doctors and statisticians and engineers. America wasn't taking people who weren't these things because that wasn't what was needed. We were very rare, these people in the arts. We knew all the people in the arts because that's where our interest lay. We knew the Indians who were around and other people who were actors but weren't Indians. It was an intellectual bookish, artistic world.

Were you fully embraced by the non-Indian art scene?

As curiosities, yes. But as somebody to give work to, no. It was very hard to get work. That's why we needed other jobs, all of us. I am in the art world; I have one daughter who's an actress, one who is a writer. The actress daughter has the same problem I did. But she is two steps ahead. Indians now are more in shows. People are writing more parts for Indians and they can play non-Indians. In House of Cards, my daughter played a Latino. (In my time) they never thought of us as secretaries or lawyers. We were just Indians, and they were always the shiek-y types. They came vaguely from the Middle East.

What do you make of Mindy Kaling and Aziz Ansari and Indians on Pizza Hut commercials?

It's changing. This new generation is getting much more work. My daughter's generation and her friends — all of these people you mention — she knows all these people because they've all been at it together for a long time.

HOME COOKING

Rice: not just some plain grain

Theresa Albert

For Metro Canada

Canadians are learning that healthy and tasty can coexist when they take a bite out of the world around them. Rice is a practical grain that goes with everything and is a healthier option than many other starches like nutrition-robbled peeled and boiled potatoes. According to a study published in Food and Nutrition Sciences, rice consumption was associated with better diet quality and general nutrient intake.

Here are some cool facts about rice to spout at the water cooler:

- Contrary to common thinking, rice can be reheated. Cool and store covered in the fridge for up to a week or freezer up to 6 weeks. Homemade "minute rice" simply needs 2 Tbsp of liquid per cup of rice added before warming it up in a microwave or on the stovetop.
- Canada doesn't grow rice, meaning US-grown rice is as local as it gets. Nearly 70 per cent of our rice is from south of the border.

- One seed of rice yields more than 3,000 grains. It is the highest yielding cereal grain and can grow in many kinds of soils. This hits all the right notes for our sustainability quest.
- About 50 per cent of North Americans consume only half of the magnesium they should. Magnesium is critical for muscle function. There is more magnesium in 1 cup of cooked long grain brown rice (21 per cent DV) than in 3.5 cups of spinach (20 per cent DV), and it has 4 g of fibre.

REVIEW

Cadillac CTS boasts angular beauty and potent chassis

Mike Goetz
For Metro Canada

The original Cadillac CTS debuted in 2002 to herald the brand's new "Art and Science" design direction. It showed Cadillac was serious about moving away from its traditional luxury role of providing big and cushy American iron, to one that took on the premium German brands at their own sporty, high-tech games.

It's a plan that has more or less worked; sales are definitely up at Cadillac, but models still chase their respective rivals. In the case of the midsize CTS, that means it is still operating in the shadow of those class-conquering BMW 5 Series and Mercedes-Benz E-Class models, both of which are the very definition of a moving target.

The current-generation CTS, which debuted in 2014, is a bit of a curious animal. It seems to have aced the hardest parts of matching up with its premium competition, namely beautiful and distinctive styling, and a chassis that is the measure of anything in its class for on-road competence and enjoyment. The more mundane aspects of this vehicle seem to let it down.

But let's first go over more of the good stuff ...

The new RWD-based architecture features judicious use of aluminum and magnesium, making the CTS one of the lighter cars in its class.

Slide into the interior and you'll be enveloped by a multitude of textures and finishes.

Our test vehicle had the optional 3.6-litre V6, which is all new this year. Rated at 335 hp and 284 lb-ft of torque, it is part of Cadillac's new engine family, and features heady technology such as automatic stop/start, direct injection with integrated exhaust manifolds, rigid aluminum block, and a cylinder deactivation system, which shuts down only one cylinder on each bank.

Net result is a very powerful, quiet and efficient V6. Combined with the new 8-speed automatic transmission, you have a totally up-to-date powertrain, and another reason why this Cadillac is so satisfying to drive.

Now a few gripes ...

The back seats are a bit tight for a luxury car of this size.

There are almost too many different types of materials and surfaces at play in the interior. Feels too busy to be sophisticated and calming.

Pricing has gotten steeper, especially when you start loading up on the available high tech. Cadillac is revisiting this issue, however, with special pricing programs.

The CUE driver interface continues to drag down the enjoyment of this car. With everything controlled by a touchscreen that is not super-fast-reacting, your eyes are constantly going back and forth from the screen to the road, which can contribute to a bit of needless nervousness behind the wheel.

MLB PLAYOFFS

K.C. bounces back from loss to take 3-1 series lead

A dream season for the Blue Jays could end short of its destination Wednesday, with Toronto once again on the verge of post-season elimination.

Ben Zobrist and Alex Rios homered as Kansas City roughed up Toronto starter R.A. Dickey early and a depleted bullpen late en route to a lopsided 14-2 victory Tuesday that pushed the Blue Jays to the playoff precipice.

The Royals lead the best-of-seven American League Championship Series 3-1, meaning Toronto now faces its fourth must-win game of the post-season.

Game 5 goes Wednesday at the Rogers Centre with Toronto's Marco Estrada facing Edinson Volquez in a rematch of Game 1 at Kauffman Stadium.

"We'll be fine (Wednesday) if we get a good outing by Marco. We expect to," Toronto manager John Gibbons said hopefully.

"And it was ugly today, no doubt about that. That's all I can say."

How ugly? Their bullpen in tatters, the Jays sent in infielder Cliff Pennington to pitch with two outs and two one in the ninth.

The number of times a team has come back from a 3-1 series deficit to win the ALCS. The Royals achieved that feat in 1985 against the Blue Jays.

The Royals' Lorenzo Cain slides safely into home plate past Blue Jays pitcher R.A. Dickey in Toronto on Tuesday.

RICK MADONIK/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Pennington, who pitched in college, gave up two runs on back-to-back singles in a seven-pitch cameo before Russell Martin saved him with a foul catch at the Jays dugout.

With the game a lost cause, Gibbons tried to keep Mark Lowe, Aaron Sanchez and Roberto Osuna — his top three relievers — out of the fray to fight another day. But he had to use Lowe for an inning.

The 14 runs allowed matched the Jays' post-season record for most runs against them, a mark set 22 years to the day in a 15-14 win over the Phillies in the

ALCS Game 4

1993 World Series.

The Royals pitchers have shut down the free-swinging Toronto bats in three of four games. The Jays, who led the majors with 891 runs in the regular season, have scored zero, three, 11 and two against Kansas City.

The Jays slugged 232 homers during the season. While they homered three times in Monday's 11-8 win, they have failed to find the fences in the other three games.

And while the Royals homered twice off Dickey, it has largely been death by a thousand cuts for the Jays. Kansas City scored four of its runs off sacrifice flies Tuesday and has filled the bases with runners, finding a myriad of ways to bring them home.

The opportunistic Royals went

8-for-11 with runners in scoring position. Toronto was 1-for-6.

Kansas City was up 5-0 when Dickey left after dispatching just five of the 12 batters he faced in the shortest start in Jays' playoff history.

Liam Hendriks stemmed the flow with 4-1/3 innings of sparking shutout relief. Then LaTroy Hawkins and Ryan Tepera went up in flames, giving up seven runs in 1-2/3 innings.

In contrast, Royals relievers Luke Hochevar, Ryan Madson, Kelvin Herrera and Franklin Morales blanked the Jays.

+ EXTRA EYES

Cueto accuses Jays of getting help stealing signs

The Royals think there's more to the Blue Jays' home-field advantage than just loud sell-out crowds.

Pitcher Edinson Volquez said that teammate Johnny Cueto believes the Blue Jays are using a plant in the centre-field stands of Rogers Centre to steal signs.

Cueto was chased from Kansas City's 11-8 loss in Toronto on Monday night after giving up six hits and eight runs in just two innings of work.

"He said, I think he said last night, they got a guy in centre field," said Volquez, who is scheduled to start on Wednesday in Game 5. "You see how hard it is, he look to the centre field and he see somebody do this or do that, it's really hard to do that."

"But when the guy gets on second base, he said something about that, too, they were giving signs to the hitter."

Volquez seemed less than convinced that the Blue Jays were using someone in the outfield seats to read the catcher's signals to the pitcher. He repeatedly said he didn't know if Cueto's claims were true and pointed out that it's a pitcher's responsibility to make it difficult for his signs to be read.

The Blue Jays had a 53-28 record at home this season, but were 40-41 on the road. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Osuna and Sanchez fighting through ailments

Roberto Osuna and Aaron Sanchez GETTY IMAGES

Jays manager John Gibbons says closer Robert Osuna has a slight problem with a cracked nail but is OK to pitch.

Fellow reliever Aaron Sanchez is in the same boat with a blister on his finger.

Both players saw action Monday in Toronto's 11-8 win over the Kansas City Royals. Sanchez pitched 2/3 of an inning without incident while Osuna, coming in for Liam Hendriks when the Royals started to pile up hits, gave up a two-run homer in the ninth.

Gibbons said both players can throw all their pitches. But he acknowledged he had hoped to give Osuna a rest to heal up and avoid aggravating the problem.

That didn't happen as the Royals rallied late.

Gibbons says he believes he could use both pitchers in Game 5 Thursday if needed.

"We're concerned about it," he said. "You don't want to get careless. But I mean they're not labouring enough or it's that painful. Guys get those throughout a year. You might give them a couple of days. Right now you really can't do that." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Key Blackhawk down in Keith

NHL

Chicago's best blue-liner out 4-6 weeks after surgery

Blackhawks star Duncan Keith had right knee surgery on Tuesday, sidelining the Stanley Cup champions' top defenceman for the for four to six weeks.

Keith, a two-time Norris Trophy winner, has two assists in six games this season. The team said he had a meniscal tear repaired.

"I don't think it was a defining blow, but it was bothering him," coach Joel Quenneville said.

The loss of Keith, who won the Conn Smythe Trophy last season as playoff MVP, is a huge blow for the Stanley Cup champions. They play in one of the NHL's toughest divisions, and every point could make a difference at the end of the year.

The 32-year-old Keith, a two-time Olympic gold medalist with Team Canada, has led Chicago in average ice time for 10 consecutive seasons.

"Obviously, you look at a guy like Duncs, he can be arguably maybe the most valuable guy on the team with what he brings to the table," forward Patrick Kane said.

Keith is likely headed for long-term injured reserve, giving the Blackhawks some cap relief. Lubomir Visnovsky, a veteran defenceman who was with the team during training camp, could be brought back, or they could promote Ville Pokka or another defenceman from the minors.

David Rundblad and Viktor Svedberg likely will see more ice time with Keith out, and Michal Rozsival could return next month from long-term injured reserve.

"A lot of defencemen are going to get a lot more responsibility, quality enhanced in their ice time as well," Quenneville said. "I don't think we want to change our style of play, but at the same time we want to make sure that we're tight." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FIFA plan February election

Sticking with plans for a presidential election in February and revealing a series of reforms, FIFA sought to move the scandal-tarnished governing body into a new era on Tuesday.

But the shadow of corruption will return on Wednesday when ethics investigators reveal the identity of senior officials facing sanctions.

The new freedom to lift the veil of secrecy on cases will be exercised — once the accused have been notified — after FIFA's executive committee approved a request by its ethics court.

Sitting on FIFA's soon-to-be-overhauled ruling body as a senior vice-president is Angel Maria Villar, who The Associated Press has previously reported is under investigation in the corruption probe into the bidding contests for the 2018 and 2022 World Cups but has never been publicly named by the executive body.

The Spanish federation head is de facto acting UEFA president following Michel Platini's provisional suspension two weeks ago over a 2011 payment from FIFA. Villar on Tuesday replaced Platini as the acting chairman of the 2018 World Cup organizing committee.

German great Franz Beckenbauer, who was a FIFA voter when Russia was chosen to host the 2018 World Cup and Qatar secured the 2022 tournament, is also under scrutiny.

"In future, it will be possible to confirm the opening of proceedings against leading representatives of world football on request," FIFA ethics committee said Tuesday.

Acting FIFA president Issa Hayatou led an executive committee meeting for the first time. It decided the Feb. 26 election should proceed as planned. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAMPIONS LEAGUE

Arsenal's late goals stun dominant Bayern

Goals from Olivier Giroud and Mesut Ozil helped Arsenal end a run of two consecutive defeats in the Champions League with a morale-boosting 2-0 victory over Bayern Munich on Tuesday.

Arsenal knew that victory in at least one of its next two matches against Bayern would be vital for advancing from Group F, and it managed to inflict a first defeat of the season on Pep Guardiola's side. Arsenal now has three points in the group and is third after three matches, with

TUESDAY in London

Bayern staying top on six points. Olympiakos is second on goal difference with six points after beating Dinamo Zagreb 1-0.

Substitute Giroud gave Arsenal the lead when he bundled the ball into the net on the 77th minute, after Manuel Neuer rushed off his line and failed to claim a free-kick into the penalty area from Santi Cazorla.

Ozil sealed the win in stoppage time, converting a cross at the byline from Hector Bellerin. Neuer hooked the ball away, but only after it had crossed the line. Bayern controlled possession throughout the first half at the Emirates Stadium and Arsenal relied on saves from Petr Cech to deny Thiago Alcantara and Douglas Costa. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE Easy Shrimp Tacos

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

Once your ingredients are prepped, these tacos come together in a flash. Serves 4

Ready in
Prep time: 30 minutes

Ingredients

- 1 lb peeled, deveined shrimp
- 1 Tbsp olive oil
- 3 cloves of garlic, minced
- 1 tsp cumin
- 1/2 tsp chili powder
- 1/4 tsp salt
- 8 tortillas
- 3 Tbsp lime juice
- 1/4 head of red cabbage
- 2 Tbsp lime juice
- 4 Tbsp sour cream
- 2 Tbsp lime juice
- A good pinch of salt
- Sliced radishes, avocado

Directions

1. Peel and devein shrimp and rinse under cold water. In a shallow bowl, mix oil, garlic, cumin, chili, salt and toss in shrimp. Refrigerate for 15 minutes (or overnight).

2. Preheat oven 200 degrees. Wrap tortillas in damp paper towel or kitchen towel, place in oven.

3. Slice the red cabbage and gently pull it apart into strands. Toss in a bowl with 3 Tbsp lime juice, olive oil and salt to taste. Set aside.

4. In a small bowl, mix the sour cream, 2 Tbsp lime juice and a pinch of salt to make a crema and set aside.

5. Heat a skillet to high, add a little olive oil. Add half of the shrimp. Cook until you can see pink come up around the edge. Flip them over and cook on the other side for a couple of minutes or until the shrimp are pink and opaque. Repeat with second batch.

6. Place shrimp, crema, tortillas, cilantro, salsa, sliced radishes and avocado on the table and let people build their own tacos.

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
Tackle problems one at a time or your efforts won't amount to much. There may be one or two minor nuisances between now and the Sun's change of signs on Friday but nothing you cannot comfortably handle.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
You don't have to justify your opinions to anyone. You are entitled to your beliefs and are under no obligation to submit to cross-examination.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Let your thoughts roam. There are no limits to what you can imagine and there are no limits to what you can achieve. If others think that your ideas are bizarre, agree with them and change nothing.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
You deal with whatever challenges you face with ease. Your confidence is so high at the moment that even so-called superiors will come to you for advice.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
You may be on a tight schedule but you must still make time for people who depend on you. Those who are feeling crushed by events desperately need a touch of your can-do spirit.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
This is a good time to convince others that you know what you are talking about. Whether that is actually true remains to be seen, but your powers of persuasion are such that no one will disbelieve you.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
There are people in your social circle who envy you for your popularity and are plotting to make you look bad. Be on your guard. Watch out for those who flatter you too much.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You have enviable self-belief. But you will convince yourself, wrongly, that you can master something that is simply beyond you. You don't have to be good at everything.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Your confidence may be high but don't take too much for granted, because what you gain through confidence today could easily be lost through over-confidence when the Sun changes signs on Friday.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
If you are going to disagree with someone make sure you stick to the facts, because if you exaggerate they will make you look stupid. If the facts are not strong enough to back up your case, then keep quiet.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Keep things simple and don't look for difficult answers when easy ones will do. You can tie yourself in knots trying to understand the unknowable.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Keep your wits when dealing with cash and investments. It is unlikely that anyone is trying to cheat you. Just because someone else has made a mistake does not mean you have to make it too.
